Performance

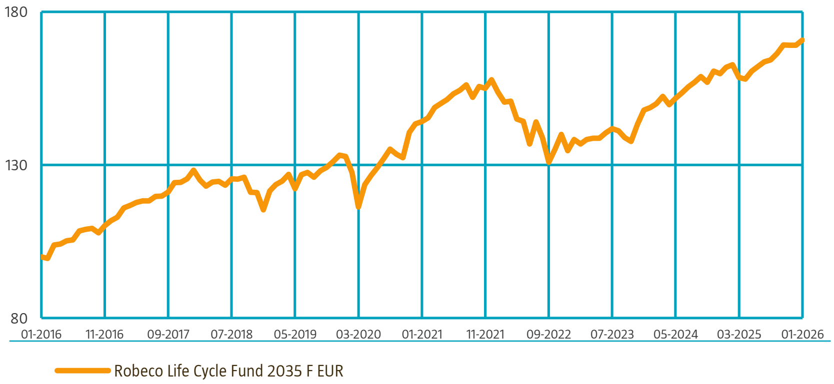
Indexed value (until 31-01-2026) - Source: Robeco



Performance

Based on transaction prices, the fund's return was 1.01%.
The Life Cycle funds started the year on a positive note, with all funds delivering returns ranging from 1.0% to 2.3%. While all asset classes in the portfolios ended the month in positive territory, equities were the primary driver of performance. Within the portfolios, emerging market assets were the top performers. Emerging market equities delivered returns of more than 7%, while emerging market debt gained over 2%. Notably, emerging market debt even outperformed global equities during the month. Performance across the fund range was mixed, with the number of outperformers and underperformers broadly balanced. The main laggards were concentrated in fixed income. Overall security selection contributed positively to returns, driven primarily by investments in emerging market equities, which outperformed by more than 2%. Value-oriented strategies also performed well during the month. From a tactical perspective, portfolios entered the year overweight in equities, which contributed positively to performance. This overweight position was partially reduced toward the end of the month.

Market development

January markets experienced heightened volatility, driven by shifting policy signals, early US dollar weakness, and strong commodity performance. Trade uncertainty resurfaced following the announcement of Greenland-related tariff measures, briefly weighing on risk sentiment and boosting demand for strategic resources before fading as monetary policy expectations shifted. In Japan, equities recorded solid gains after the government announced a new fiscal stimulus package and confirmed a snap general election, which investors viewed as strengthening the administration's policy mandate. As earnings season progressed, corporate results across major regions proved resilient, helping stabilize equity sentiment despite ongoing macroeconomic and geopolitical uncertainty. Emerging markets outperformed developed markets, supported by improving capital inflows and strength in commodity-exporting economies, while developed markets posted more modest gains. Precious metals reversed sharply late in the month, with gold and silver selling off after the appointment of a new Federal Reserve chair triggered a rebound in the US dollar.

Expectation of fund manager

Markets opened 2026 positively, with precious metals and emerging markets advancing and the US dollar weakening amid policy-driven volatility. Unexpected US policy announcements continue to shape market sentiment. Our investment stance remains unchanged. We favor equities across developed and emerging markets, supported by resilient earnings and a supportive macro backdrop. Monetary policy remains central, as economies show improving growth momentum while inflation remains elevated. In Australia, markets have begun to price potential rate hikes, though we view tightening as premature in most regions, with Japan the key exception. In the United States, uncertainty surrounding the successor to Chair Powell may add risk premiums to government bonds. We therefore maintain a neutral stance on sovereign debt, remain underweight in corporate bonds, and retain a constructive view on emerging market debt, supported by attractive carry and a weaker US dollar backdrop. While gold exposure was reduced, we continue to view it hedge against risk and currency debasement.
