Depending on the maturity of the fund the volatility could be higher or lower but expected future volatility will be lower than past volatility.
- The fund may use financial derivatives.
- A (derivative) counterparty may fail to fulfil its obligations. Counterparty risk is reduced by exchanging collateral.

Performance commentary

Based on transaction prices, the fund's return was -0.87%.

July was a more challenging month for financial markets. Renewed hostilities between Iran and the United States pushed oil prices higher and weighed on investor sentiment. As a result, both equity and bond markets came under pressure. Toward the end of the month, however, equity markets recovered as corporate earnings proved stronger than expected. This market environment affected the performance of the Robeco Life Cycle funds. In July, the funds delivered returns ranging from -0.2% to -0.80%. Funds with a higher allocation to fixed income generated the lowest returns, as elevated government bond yields limited the recovery in fixed income markets. Equity markets, by contrast, recovered more strongly as geopolitical concerns faded and investors refocused on corporate fundamentals. Asset allocation made a modest negative contribution, as the funds maintained a slight overweight in equities. Security selection contributed positively, driven primarily by the strong performance of Robeco BP Global Premium Equities and Robeco QI Global Conservative Equities.

Market development

Renewed tensions in the Middle East shaped financial markets throughout July. The escalation of geopolitical risks shifted investors' attention toward energy prices, inflation and interest rates. Major equity indices proved relatively resilient, but beneath the surface markets underwent a broader repricing. The escalation of hostilities between the United States and Iran pushed oil prices higher, reversing much of the improvement in inflation expectations seen during the second quarter. Central banks left rates unchanged but adopted a cautious tone as higher energy prices complicated the inflation outlook. Government bond yields rose, tightening financial conditions and weighing on fixed income. Corporate earnings generally exceeded expectations, supporting equity markets despite higher discount rates. However, returns became increasingly selective, with significant divergence across sectors and individual companies. US equities remained resilient, while European markets faced pressure from higher energy costs and rising bond yields. Emerging markets underperformed, largely due to a sharp correction in South Korean equities. Headline indices masked substantial differentiation.

Expectation of fund manager

Strong corporate earnings, stable economic growth and steady labor markets continue to provide a supportive backdrop for risk assets. At the same time, renewed geopolitical tensions in the Middle East have increased uncertainty just as equity valuations had returned to more demanding levels. We have therefore moved to a neutral tactical stance on equities. Markets reacted quickly to renewed tensions. Since then, earnings and economic data have been more reassuring than expected. Europe has remained more resilient than feared, while market leadership has continued to broaden, with the equal weighted S&P 500 outperforming its market capitalization weighted counterpart. If that continues, it would support a return to an overweight equity position. For now, bond markets appear to place too much emphasis on inflation risks. We continue to favor selective government bonds, particularly shorter-dated European maturities, while remaining cautious on longer-dated US Treasuries. Within corporate credit, we remain neutral in investment grade but underweight in high yield, reflecting unattractive valuations.
