Performance commentary

Based on transaction prices, the fund's return was 3.07%.

The fund delivered a very strong relative performance and was well-positioned to benefit from the strong rebound in rates and currency markets during the period. Key performance contributions came from overweights in countries such as Hungary, Brazil and Argentina, supported by rate rallies and improving fundamentals. Hungary delivered standout returns after elections signaled a decisive shift toward pro-European, growth-oriented policies. FX exposure in Turkey and Egypt added value after earlier sell-offs. As markets rallied, we selectively took profits and reduced risk, reflecting rising uncertainty around global inflation and growth amid increasing geopolitical tensions. We remain focused on maintaining a selective stance and preserving gains, while awaiting greater clarity on how these risks will feed through to global and EM fixed income markets.

Market development

April offered a partial recovery for emerging market local currency debt. The US dollar softened as safe-haven demand faded from its March peak, providing a tailwind for EM FX and allowing local currencies to retrace a portion of prior losses. The currency recovery was uneven, however, as commodity-exporting economies benefited from still-elevated oil prices, with energy-linked currencies outperforming on favorable terms of trade, while energy-importing markets, particularly across Asia, remained under pressure from deteriorating current accounts and imported inflation. Local rates proved more resistant to recovery. Central banks remained largely on hold, unwilling to signal easing given persistent pass-through from elevated energy costs into domestic inflation expectations. Brent crude traded with continued volatility, briefly spiking above USD 125 before retreating toward USD 115, with the Strait of Hormuz remaining effectively closed. Term premiums stayed elevated and yield curves retained much of March's upward shift. The duration and severity of the oil shock remains the key risk for the asset class.

Expectation of fund manager

Dispersion across the asset class remains elevated and we continue to prefer markets offering compelling carry, credible policy frameworks and sound fundamentals. US dollar weakness, shifting Fed expectations and de-dollarization trends continue to provide a constructive macro backdrop. The Middle East conflict remains the principal source of uncertainty, transmitting through energy prices, risk appetite and volatility. That said, many EM economies are well placed to absorb this pressure; external balances are generally healthy, real yields remain attractive and policy credibility has strengthened considerably. We expect returns to remain highly differentiated, with commodity exporters and higher yielding markets demonstrating greater resilience than energy-importing, lower-yielding economies facing more persistent headwinds. A meaningful de-escalation in tensions would be the most significant catalyst for the asset class, particularly for EM currencies, and would reinforce the case for duration in markets where valuations have become increasingly attractive.

Sector allocation

The portfolio remained predominantly invested in local currency government bonds, complemented by smaller allocations to agencies, supranationals and hard currency sovereign bonds, alongside a modest cash position. Non-treasury allocations were primarily driven by valuation opportunities in agency and supranational issuers rather than a strategic shift away from local markets. Overall, local currency exposure continued to represent the dominant driver of portfolio risk and returns versus the benchmark.

Country / Region allocation

Country positioning at the end of March was concentrated in a handful of high-conviction markets. Overweights in Hungary, the Czech Republic and Mexico reflected attractive real yields and supportive macro dynamics, while underweights in Malaysia, India and Indonesia reflected less attractive valuations.

Duration allocation

Duration positioning ended the period modestly below benchmark, following a reduction in duration exposure toward the end of the month to below-benchmark as tensions in Iran drove heightened uncertainty and volatility. While constructive on the asset class, we scaled down duration overweight exposures during the month to lock in gains after positive performance. We maintained selective duration underweights to manage the overall beta of the fund, as progress between Iran and the US stalled. The portfolio maintained overweights in Hungary and Mexico, while the underweight in Asia remained.

Rating allocation

The fund's overall credit rating at month-end stood at A3/BAA1, continuing to reflect a balanced allocation across the investment grade spectrum alongside selective exposure to higher-yielding credits. The largest underweights remained in A and BAA-rated categories, where exposure is materially below the benchmark. By contrast, the portfolio retained exposure to lower-rated segments, including CAA and non-rated issuers, reflecting selective allocations to frontier sovereigns and higher-yielding markets where valuations remain attractive.
