

Equities Slip as Oil Prices Jump

- Portfolio broadly matched benchmark, marginally outperformed in May
- Overweight semiconductors and AI infrastructure; selective financials exposure
- Constructive on AI-led growth; monitoring geopolitics and energy inflation risks

Last month's performance

May saw further broad market strength as the US-Iran ceasefire remained in place, with optimism around a more sustained solution despite sporadic apparent infractions and limited definitive movement towards a lasting deal. Growth names pushed higher, with AI-related stocks remaining firmly in favor as markets overlooked geopolitical risks and inflation concerns to focus on all aspects of AI, from cooling to memory. Unsurprisingly, mega-cap names across regions delivered positive performance.

The portfolio saw strong absolute gains over the period, returning 577bps and modestly outperforming its benchmark, the MSCI ACWI. Tech-related names were our best-performing holdings over the month, with AMD generating sizable returns following an impressive earnings release, beating estimates and raising its outlook amid increasing demand for CPUs—as also reflected at peer Intel—from agentic AI, alongside continued strength in GPUs. SK Square also delivered positive returns amid a more stable situation in the Middle East, a broadly less volatile energy market, and memory demand showing no signs of slowing.

We also saw stability in Industrials in light of a somewhat calmer Middle East, while our positioning in Utilities aided performance. At the other end of the scale, Financials was our largest detractor at the sector level, with BTG Pactual experiencing weakness on the back of Brazilian macro pressures, including interest-rate concerns and inflationary pressures. Deutsche Boerse also had a weaker month due to the transactional nature of its revenues and its exposure to energy markets, which softened on hopes of a sustained peace deal.

No inference can be made on the future development of the company. This is not a buy, sell, or hold recommendation.

Our top active position is Advanced Micro Devices (AMD), a leading semiconductor company specializing in CPUs, GPUs and AI accelerators. We see rising AI and cloud infrastructure investment, combined with tight industry supply, as key drivers supporting our thesis that AMD can continue to gain share through its expanding data-center platform, translating multi-year AI compute tailwinds into sustained earnings growth and potential valuation upside.

Our second-largest active position is SK Square, a South Korea-based technology holding company focused on semiconductor and ICT investments. Its high exposure to the semiconductor upcycle – in particular Korean memory name SK Hynix – supports our thesis that leveraged participation in a sustained chip-sector rally could translate into disproportionate gains across its portfolio and further upside from current momentum.

Our third-largest active position is Sumitomo Mitsui Financial Group, a Japan-based diversified financial institution with businesses spanning retail and wholesale banking, securities, leasing, consumer finance and global markets. Rising global bond yields and interest-rate volatility should support net interest income and trading-related revenues, and expansion into new, fast growing, regions should provide a runway for long term earnings growth.

Portfolio changes

We opened a position in Alphabet at the start of the month. The name has moved past the regulatory overhang of the DoJ case, holds a particularly strong position as a major cloud service provider, and is a beneficiary of Anthropic's strength. From an engagement perspective, the new position coincides with the initiation of a programme on responsible AI.

We made a few other small adjustments over the month, managing position sizes and taking some profits by trimming names that have been hitting new all-time highs—AMD and SK Square—while adding to names that we believe diversify our exposures and retain attractive outlooks, such as Amrize and Vale.

Engagement activity

We held engagements with two portfolio companies covering climate strategy, governance, and operational resilience. One engagement focused on a newly listed construction materials company in a high-emissions sector, where we raised the need to translate a long-term net-zero ambition into a credible transition plan with clear interim targets. We also highlighted gaps in environmental disclosure, including pollution management, water use, and waste, alongside the need for stronger transparency on health and safety performance and governance practices. As this is an early-stage engagement, establishing a structured dialogue and securing initial commitments will be a key focus going forward.

In a separate engagement, we spoke with a global industrial and technology group to discuss governance, strategy, and sustainability topics. Discussions covered executive shareholding requirements and audit committee composition, where we reiterated our preference for a fully independent audit committee and sought clarification on enforcement mechanisms for shareholding policies. We also explored the company's digital and AI strategy, noting that these activities are associated with higher energy use and may affect indirect (scope 3) emissions, and encouraged greater transparency on how these impacts are measured. Supply chain resilience and circularity were key themes, alongside human capital management and water stewardship, where we encouraged greater transparency on how water risk assessments inform company practices.

Outlook

The past month clearly dismissed the old market wisdom to “sell in May”, as stocks just kept grinding higher. The reality on the ground, however, is that there’s still an unresolved energy shock. Historically, such shocks fuel stagflation risks down the line through higher costs, demand destruction and, hence, weaker growth. AI-driven earnings growth might dominate near-term market direction, but clearly in case the conflict persists, a stagflation regime might trump AI benefits. Therefore, it seems like markets assume a quick, genuine de-escalation that decisively knocks down oil prices, takes US yields closer to 4% and with it, extends the equity party. Several very large upcoming IPOs, including SpaceX, OpenAI and Anthropic, add to this crowding effect. The base case from here is still an up-but-bumpy path for global equities, with the rates-geopolitics-AI triangle as the key swing factor. That said, with stretched valuations, any disappointment on peace talks, growth outlook or tone by central banks could translate into air pockets. In portfolio terms, that argues for a tilt toward quality growth and AI-linked names, but with more respect for rate sensitivity and less bravado in the most expensive corners of the market.
