Lifestyle choices promote good health and reduce wasteful spending

Healthcare costs are exploding. Worldwide health care spending stands at nearly 10% of GDP and is rising steadily. Double that and you get the proportion of GDP the US spends annually on healthcare – an alarming rate that is not only excessive but unsustainable.

And it's not just a 'rich-world' problem. Chronic disease is the single largest factor contributing to health care costs around the world – a classification that includes diabetes, high blood pressure, cardiovascular disease, stroke and many cancers. What's more, the rise in chronic disease is directly linked with the rise in obesity and unhealthy lifestyle choices.

Any sustainable strategy for promoting health and controlling costs will include prevention and early intervention. The Healthy Living strategy invests in companies providing products and services that promote good nutrition, physical activity, personal care and hygiene as well as companies providing diagnostic testing and intervention so patients can recover faster and at less expense.

David Kägi, PhD

'Prevention is key to keeping populations healthy and health care costs in check. Fortunately, next-generation consumers recognize the necessity of investing in smart lifestyle choices now to avoid disease and health care expense in the future.'
