

Global markets close a strong February amid upbeat economic growth

- Market rally fueled after rate settling announcement
- The low-risk approach trailed in the bullish environment
- Defensive portfolio with stable stocks at attractive valuation and yield levels

Last month's performance

The strategy lagged the MSCI World in February but performed better than the MSCI World MinVol, keeping up with the good start of 2024. The strategy managed to beat the market, mainly by avoiding the weak performance of Tesla and Apple. Moreover, holding IBM, Merck & Co, Marathon Petroleum, Chubb and P&G paid off.

Main detractors came from not holding NVIDIA, Microsoft and Meta Platforms, as these tech giants experienced another good month in February.

Market developments

Global equity markets were supported in February by the positive returns of NVIDIA (+29%) and Meta Platforms (+26%) as both tech giants posted very strong revenues numbers, with chip maker NVIDIA breaching the USD 2 trillion mark for the first time. In addition, Amazon (+14%) benefited from strong earnings figures.

Outside of tech, pharma stock Eli Lilly (+17%) continues to profit from the demand for its weight loss drugs, while also Caterpillar (+11%) beat analyst expectations. Softbank rose 36% as its stake in UK chip maker ARM paid off as the company posted stellar revenues figures on the back of the AI frenzy. On the negative side, we see negative returns for most utility stocks, under the pressure of higher interest rates. Swiss consumer giant Nestle dropped 7%, as its earnings were negatively impacted by higher cocoa, coffee and sugar prices.

Factor attribution

From a factor attribution perspective, low-risk was the main negative driver of performance, followed by valuation whereas momentum was pretty much neutral.

Source: Robeco Performance Measurement. The figures show the return of the portfolio relative to the index. The relative return of the portfolio is before management fees and after transaction costs. It is the sum of the allocation effect and the contribution of stock selection, excluding cash and other. The relative return of the portfolio is entirely attributed to the underlying Robeco factors. All stocks in the portfolio and the index are ranked based on the Robeco factors and grouped into five market-weighted quintiles. Portfolio factor exposures refer to the average over the last month. The return relates to the return over the entire period. These figures are preliminary based on the most recent month's performance results. These numbers may deviate from the final performance figures.

Current positioning

Robeco QI Global Developed Conservative Equities selects from an investable universe of around 4,500 developed market stocks, buying securities with low-risk characteristics, such as low volatility, low market sensitivity, and low distress risk. Simultaneously, these low-risk stocks are characterized by attractive valuations, a high and stable dividend, positive price momentum, and favorable analyst revisions.

Table 2 – Portfolio exposures

Relatively large portfolio weight		Relatively small portfolio weight
Consumer Staples	We invest in several stable consumer companies such as Ahold Delhaize, General Mills, Nestle, Procter & Gamble, and Walmart.	Information Technology	The underweight exposure to the sector is due to its large weight in the market index. For example, large tech stocks that are not in the portfolio include Adobe, Broadcom, NVIDIA, and Salesforce due to greater price sensitivity and high valuations.
Health care	Relatively low-risk profile with attractive yields. Examples include Bristol-Myers Squibb, Gilead Sciences, Merck & Co. and Novartis.	Materials	Not holding various high-beta stocks such as BHP Group, L'Air Liquide, Linde, and Rio Tinto.
Communication Services	Stakes in stable companies with attractive dividend yields, such as AT&T, KDDI, Nippon Telegraph and Swisscom.

Portfolio characteristics

Robeco QI Global Developed Conservative Equities has a rules-based bottom-up stock selection. The fund is currently characterized by a portfolio of low-risk stocks, offering a high and stable dividend and a price-to-earnings ratio lower than the market, as seen in the portfolio characteristics below.

At the same time, generic low-risk stocks are relatively expensive as the MSCI Minimum Volatility Index trades at higher multiples than the market index. Robeco QI Global Developed Conservative Equities offers better value and momentum exposure than the Minimum Volatility Index as these factors are explicitly incorporated into our investment process. The fund's realized strategy turnover is significantly lower than expected due to using cash flows to rebalance the portfolio: the fund uses inflows to top up top-ranked stocks and outflows to sell the least attractive names out of the portfolio.
